SHOOTING OF HENEY

and with a swaggering air which plainly boasted of his contemptible deed. "I simply set a precedent."

Francis J. Heney was conveyed to the Central Emergency Hospital from the scene of the shooting in an auto ambulance in charge of Steward Leo J. Thomas, Detective John Foley and several police officers accompanying him. It was while the ambulance was rambling through the streets that Heney made his first statement with reference to the shooting. To Foley he said:

"This is pretty tough, Foley, but they haven't got me yet."

By the time the ambulance reached the hospital an excited crowd had assembled in the street before the entrance, and it took a cordon of policemen, who had been hurriedly dispatched to the scene, several minutes to clear the way. It was a very orderly crowd, however, and, aside from the curiosity which prompted it to surge hither and thither to get a glimpse of the wounded man or learn more about his condition, there was no demonstration.

Heney stood the ride well—in fact, from the time the bullet hit him until he was removed to Lane Hospital, nearly three hours later, he did not once lose consciousness, nor was his brain clouded at any time.

FRIENDS OF HENEY GATHER.

The news of the shooting had spread with such rapidity through the city that by the time the emergency attendants had removed Heney from the ambulance to the receiving ward prominent citizens interested in the graft prosecutions and others began to assemble. Among the first of the former to appear were Rudolph Spreckels and Detective William J. Burns. Spreckels came in his private automobile. Others who came in shortly afterward were Mrs. Heney, wife of the wounded man, and her mother, Mrs. John Mc-Mullen, Assistant District Attorney Robert Duke, Colonel F. E. Beck of the Anglo-California Bank, Captain of Police Duke of the Central Station, Fremont Older and a half-score of others, mostly personal friends of Heney.

Mrs. Heney and her mother were received by Rudolph Spreckels and used into a patients' ward, adjoining the room in which the wounded man lay on the operating table. Although her agitation was great, Mrs. Heney displayed wonderful self-control.
There were tears in her eyes, but her grief was absolutely undemonstrative.
Her mother showed much more outward emotion, weeping bitterly and her frame shaking with nervous agitation.

The room in which Heney lay was cleared of all intruders, and, after the surgeons had given the wound in the head a hasty preliminary examination and bound it with a bandage of gauze, Heney was notified of the presence of his wife and mother-in-law and asked if he felt well enough to see them.

"Yes, I will see them," was Heney's reply.

His voice was comparatively strong and clear, although there were indications of laborious articulation.

Mrs. Heney entered the room first, on the arm of Spreckels, and Mrs. Mc-Mullen followed, Detective Burns close by her side. The ladies walked to the side of the operating table and Mrs.
Heney bent down and kissed her husband's lips.

Heney opened his eyes, smiled and said tenderly as he put his arms around his wife's neck:

"Is this you, dear?"
"Yes, Francis, it is I," replied Mrs.
Heney.

"I have treated them all fairly," said the wounded man.

"We all know you have, my darling; but don't agitate yourself," said Mrs.
Heney. "Mamma is here—do you want to speak with her?"

Heney nodded his assent, and Mrs.
McMullen bent over him.

What the special prosecutor said to her was inaudible to others.

"Do you want me to remain in here with you?" asked Mrs. Heney.

"I think you and mother had better go out," said Heney; and then the women retired to await the decision of the surgeons as to the exact condition of the patient and the nature of his wound.

Heney remained silent under the operation with the exception of once, when he cast his eyes over the doctors and exclaimed with as much emphasis as he could muster:

"I'll live to prosecute 'em yet. I'm feeling pretty good for a fellow as badly done up as I am."

Heney showed signs of considerable exhaustion at the end of the examination, but he revived almost immediately, and when the attendants essayed to lift him from the table to carry him into a ward to rest until he was conveyed to the Lane Hospital, the patient made their task easier by throwing his arms around the neck of one of the men and balancing himself.

It was about 6:40 o'clock when Heney was placed in an ambulance and taken to the Lane Hospital. Dr. Beasley, who is an intimate friend of Heney, was alone with him during the last few moments at the Emergency Hospital, and he said afterward that the wounded man did not speak from the time he left the operating table until his departure except to say "Good night, doctor; I'll see you again."

Thirty men, armed with rifles, and under command of Lieutenant Mullender of the Mission Police Station, have been placed on guard at the County Jail to protect Morris Haas, the assant of Prosecutor Heney, and Abe Ruef from a possible attack by a mob.

The posse was hurried to Ingleside soon after the prisoners were taken there, under the protection of a strong escort. The use of rifles in the Police Department seldom becomes necessary, but Chief Biggs is determined to take every precaution to ward off an attack. The men have also been given extra rifles and 200 rounds of ammunition.

SAN FRANCISCO, November 15.— District Attorney Langdon and Detective William J. Burns spent the afternoon with Haas in his cell at the Ingleside Jail. The prisoner was not as non-committal as he was on the day before and by a series of questions he was forced to admit that influences, the sources of which are known to the prosecution, inspired his dastardly attack on Prosecutor Heney. The District Attorney is carefully guarding this information until he can verify it.
In the meantime he will not go further than to admit that the crime was the direct result of suggestion from persons interested in the outcome of the Ruef trial.

"The statements which Haas made this afternoon," Langdon said, "are sufficient to base a case of conspiracy, but I must absolutely refuse to make them public."

Morris Haas, the rejected juror, who shot Francis J. Heney on Friday afternoon, committed suicide at 8:40 o'clock last night in his cell at County Jail No. 2. He fired a bullet into his forehead while he lay on his cot, wrapped up in a blanket and apparently asleep. His weapon was a 41-caliber derringer, an antique-pattern single-shot firearm, which, it is said, he had been able to conceal without being discovered by either his guards or the two sets of policemen and detectives, who searched him after his arrest.

Haas went to bed at 8 o'clock, and had been allowed by his guards, Detective Sergeant Thomas Burke and Patrolman Dennis Burke, to sleep with his shoes on. This peculiar request was made on the previous evening, and granted by the prison authorities. It was considered odd, but no particular notice was taken of it, and no suspicion was aroused, although the two searches of the prisoner had been defective, in that the shoes were not taken off and examined. The police say that the shoes, old-fashioned gal-lers, were the only place where a small revolver could be concealed.

Haas slept both nights with his cell door open and two guards patrolling the corridor. Patrolman Bohle was the last man to talk with the prisoner. He says that Haas seemed fairly cheerful, and did not exhibit the restlessness which characterized him on his first night in jail. Five minutes before the fatal shot was fired Bohle looked into the cell, and saw his prisoner apparently sleeping. Haas opened his eyes and glanced at the policeman, but immediately closed them again.

Bohle stepped out into the corridor again, and the next thing that happened was the report of the pistol ringing through the prison and telling everybody that a tragedy had come as a sequel to the Heney shooting.

The manner in which Haas obtained and kept the weapon with which he took his life last night, is something which will need a rigid police investigation. Detective Burns said last night that he believed the weapon had been slipped into the man's cell yesterday afternoon by somebody who eluded the vigilance of the prisoner's guards.

Captain of Police Thomas Duke, in the presence of Detective William J.
Burns, searched Morris Haas in the rear of the courtroom on Friday afternoon, following the shooting of Assistant District Attorney Francis J.
Heney, and is authority for the statement that Haas could not possibly have concealed a weapon from the searchers. He said:

"My search of Haas was made in the presence of Detective Burns and was very exhaustive. Everything was removed from Haas' person. I was afraid that he contemplated suicide, and my search was the more careful on that account. Every article of clothing was examined, and not even a scrap of paper that might contain poison was left to him. That a derringer should have escaped us is no more possible than that we should have overlooked a cannon. I am positive that Haas never left that courtroom with a weapon in his possession."

Five thousand persons, filled with sympathy for Assistant District Attorney Francis J. Heney, who lies seriously wounded at Lane Hospital, and with enthusiasm for the speakers who eulogized the injured official, thronged Dreamland Auditorium last night, and for nearly three hours the vociferous cheers of the vast assemblage reverberated through the building. Seldom has so enthusiastic, yet so orderly, a crowd gathered in this or any other city. As the presiding officer of the evening and the different members of the prosecution entered the hall men cheered themselves hoarse, women shrieked, and the roar that came from the thousands of throats shook the walls of the building and echoed for blocks in every direction.

At the frequent mention of the name of Francis J. Heney the audience would rise en masse, but after it had delivered itself of its enthusiasm in two or three hearty and ringing cheers, every member would take his seat and the voice of the speaker could be heard in the farthest corner of the auditorium.

This good order was fostered by the speakers in their remarks. All spoke feelingly. All gave expression to the sentiment that it was time for the citizens of the city to think, speak and act, but all of them counseled temperate thoughts and words and lawful acts. There was no utterance that could be seized upon to inflame the mind of the most passionate.

At 7 o'clock there were 2000 people in the hall, and at 7:30 there were 5000. None of the late comers could gain admission and long before 8 o'clock, the time set for the meeting to be called to order, mounted police had been drawn upon the sidewalk outside the main entrance and barred the way for any more to enter. As soon as the auditorium was filled the overflow crowd, in which there were several thousand persons, started for the park at Post and Steiner streets, but the police refused to permit a gathering there. The overflow meeting was then held in front of the main entrance to the pavilion and Steiner street was blocked with the multitudes that congregated to hear the speakers, who did relay duty with the speakers in the main meeting.

The police precautions were well taken. Thirty-two men were detailed by Chief of Police Biggs, and Captain Anderson of the Park district was placed in command. Sixteen patrolmen in uniforms and eleven in plain clothes were in attendance, besides five mounted men. Twenty men were held in reserve at the O'Farrell street Station, and the entire day watch of Company A was ordered to report to the Central Station as an additional reserve.

The first enthusiasm was displayed in a college yell for Francis J. Heney. The principal speakers had not arrived at the time, and the meeting had not been called to order, although the hall was full. The yell was led from the gallery by a number of college men, and was taken up throughout the pavilion. The applause had scarcely subsided when Mayor Taylor, who was to preside at the meeting, walked in with his secretary, Harry McKannay. The applause and cheering was repeated and redoubled.

William J. Burns entered the building shortly afterward, and was greeted with great enthusiasm.
